Foreword

Sections of the basic manuscript of this volume were prepared by Robert D. Biggs, John A. Brinkman, Michael B. Rowton, Aaron Shaffer, and Ronald F. G. Sweet. Thanks are again due Professor W. G. Lambert, Birmingham, England, for his reading of the manuscript and for his suggestions and corrections, and to Miguel Civil for his careful reading of the Sumerian material cited. Professor Hans E. Hirsch, University of Vienna, has again read the proofs in galley and suggested a number of improvements.

The three meanings of babtu have been united under one entry for the following two reasons: the Sumerogram dag.gi₄.a is used for mng. 1 as well as mng. 2, and a semantic relationship between mng. 2 and mng. 3 can well be suggested leading from "outstanding delivery" in administrative relations and "outstanding payment" in private (mng. 2) to "deficit, loss," etc. (mng. 3).

The Sumerian designation of staples in mng. 2 as sila.gál.la (earlier: sila.a.gál.la), lit. "being in the street" (cf. the similar terms šu.a.gál.la "being in hand" HSS 10 32:8, OAkk., and ká.e.gál.la UET 3 1505 i 19, see Jacobsen, Studia Orientalia Pedersen 173) refers to staples or goods whose delivery is expected and seems to be related to the designation dag.gi₄.a (and babtu) of the same meaning, inasmuch as both terms refer by means of a topographic indication to a specific relationship between persons under obligation to make deliveries. The same or a similar practice is reflected in the NB documents which differentiate assets as being ina biti and ina sūqi (see sūqu). The exact range of meaning of babtu in the specific context of the OA texts from Cappadocia still poses a number of problems, as does the designation of groups of persons as babtum in OB, Mari and, probably, OB Alalakh (see mng. 1a-2'b'), where common residence in a city ward does not seem probable.

bahrū in aban bahrē s.; (a stone); SB.

NA₄.ḥar.ḥum.b.a.ŠIR = (blank) = [aban ba-ab-re-e] Hg. B IV 117.

*NA₄ ba-ab-re-e : NA₄ har-ḥum(var. -hu)-ba-ŠIR // NA₄ mu-ṣal-tu* Uruanna III 153, var. from Köcher Pflanzenkunde 12 ii 54.

NA₄ ba-ab-re-e (in a list of stones used against šimmat ša šepi paralysis of the foot) BE 31 60 r. i 1; <NA₄> ba-ab-re-e (in a list of stones, for a magic rosary, where the det. NA₄ is regularly omitted) KAR 213 iv 2; 2 NA₄ ba-ab-re-e (in a list of stones) KAV 185 iv 11; 2 ba-ab-ri(!)-e ADD 993 iv 7 (coll. Thompson DAC 173); in ADD 820:2 and 5f., read probably šá-ba-ab-x.

With the exception of the emended ADD ref. written without the NA₄ sign, the cited refs. seem to suggest the reading aban bahrē, which would thus designate the form of a stone object, i.e., a charm, rather than a specific stone. The correspondence to harhumbašir (or harhubbašil) (previously cited in CAD 6 (H) 104 as harmunu) is offered in the third column of Hg. only and is probably a later substitution or explanation of the difficult harhumbanu which in medical texts clearly denotes a plant and appears only in the mentioned lists (Hg. and Uruanna) with the determinative for stones. In ZA 36 200:27, one should restore, most probably, hašhūru or hatħūru.

Since no other word exists, besides ušandā “bird-catcher” or “fowler,” for hunter, and on the basis of the hemer. ref. cited mng. 1a-2',

the bā'iru must be considered a hunter as well as a fisherman. For the refs. wr. ŠU.HA.UD.DA, see mng. 1c-1', see also šuhadakku, and see Landsberger, JNES 8 252 n. 30.

In the OB period, the bā'iru's are organized in units under an ugula or nubanda, and perform military service alongside the rēdū- soldiers, and receive fields in tenure in compensation. In the NB period the bā'iru's are also organized in units whose nature it is difficult to establish. For a development, in the sense of “marauder,” see Oppenheim, JCS

and belongs, therefore, to maqtu, which in this sense is well attested in NB. The copies support the reading ma against ba.

Since balag occurs among other words which designate percussion instruments, and the “skin” of the balaggu is mentioned (see Hh. XI 265 in lex. section), balag has often been interpreted as a kind of drum. However, the use of tanned hides in connection with a harp is not excluded, and the word for drumstick, algarsurrú, q.v., also designates the plectrum. That balag was originally a harp is certain from the pictograph in the Uruk IV/III period, see Falkenstein ATU No. 349. For the later sign form, see Deimel Fara 1 No. 41.

The balag designates not only the musical instrument, but also the lamentation which was accompanied by the instrument. Note that from the Fara period (see Jestrin Šuruppak 494 r. ii 6) on, the professional mourner is designated as balag.di, in Akkadian sārihu, q.v.

2. (the tree which produces this substance): see Hh. III 104f., in lex. section; erēni šurmēni šikitti supāli qanē bal-lu-uk-ki ištū šubat [x] šadē ellūti cedar, cypress, almond tree, supālu, (sweet) reed, b.-tree from where the [...] sits on the pure mountains BBR No. 75-78:7; erēnu ŠIM.MUG (in a description of a landscape) Gilg. VI 10; GIŠ.ERIN GIŠ.BAL TCL 6 12 r. xi 2'.

The word designates an aromatic matter, most probably a resinous substance, which was imported (in considerable quantities) into Mesopotamia. The provenience remains unknown and the few extant refs. to the tree are quite vague. The uses are not characteristic enough to establish any identification; the proposal of R. C. Thompson, DAB 340ff. “styrax,” remains a possibility though it is based on an unwarranted interpretation of BBR No. 75-78:7 where qanē stands for qanū ṭābu, which is usually associated with ballukku.

The use of two logograms causes uncertainty. Wherever ŠIM.BAL appears beside ŠIM.MUG (e.g., AMT 56,1:4 against r. 13, Küchler Beitr. pl. 2:18 against ibid. 15, etc.), the latter is to be read nukkattu, q.v., while when they alternate in variants (e.g., AMT 35,1:7 and 38,2 iv 10) the reading ballukku has to be accepted for both. All refs. to ŠIM.MUG can, of course, be likewise read nukkatu. The lists are well aware of this possibility and mention the two substances side by side.

Note also the relationship between ballukku and baluhhu, both designations of aromatic substances.

References in context and the entries in the lexical texts show that the word must be assumed to be a plurale tantum and, therefore, is not to be connected with either bamtu A or bamtu B. The latter are cited in the singular in the vocabularies and appear quite often and early as pandu. The Izbu Comm. cited in lex. section is not aware of these differentiations any more; it assumes that ba-ma-a-tum corresponds to “half” (see bamtu A) as well as to “with protruding ribs” (see sub šelānū and bamtu B) and to “open country” (sēru).

The adjective banū begins to replace damqu in the MB period, continuing into NB when banū in turn is largely replaced by babbanū, q.v. In the bilingual texts and lexical refs. in which banū translates Sum. sa₇, ZA.SUH, or mul, these equivalents show banū to be related in meaning to banū ša ramani “to grow naturally, by itself,” see banū B. This connotation may be seen in some of the literary and OB refs., but in most of these refs. banū already seems to be synonymous with damqu. For further discussion and literary refs., see banū B v.

The two verbs banū A and B have been separated according to the meanings suggested by their lexical equivalents, into banū A, “to build, construct” (Sum. dím, dù, etc.), and banū B, “to grow” (Sum. ugunu = banū ša ramani, and SAR, with the reading ni-si, ni-is-sa for nì.sa₇, and sa₇). Banū B denotes, on the one hand, the growth of vegetation, and supernatural growth (as in banū ša ramani), and, on the other, refers to plants, stones, animals, and the sky (see ikiltu) as exceptionally well formed. In the latter contexts, it seems that the factitive bunnū is derived from the adjective in the meaning “formosus” (see Jensen, KB 6/1 459), and that the simple stem banū is a secondary late formation, after banū adj. had replaced damqu. The meaning of banū in Old Babylonian and earlier texts refers only to growth, as can be seen, e.g., from the OB bil. text Sumer 13 71:7, where ZALÁG.ZALÁG.BI with the gloss za-al-za-li-bi is translated by dummuqu, while in the SB bil. texts (see CT 17 21, CT 16 36, in lex. section), it is translated by bunnū. The Sum. equivalents sa₇, sig₇, and mū.mū, of the bil. texts, with the meaning to grow, are, however, often translated by the N-stem, and probably have been

reinterpreted as passives of banū A, and have been so cited there.

barāhu v.; (mng. uncert.); lex.*; I, II; cf. barīhu, burāhu.

ul = ba-ra-hu, ul-su RA 16 167 iii 9f. (group voc.), cf. ul = ba-[ra-hu], ul = k[a-ak-ka-bu], ul = šá-[...] CT 19 14 ii 24ff.; tu-bar-rah 5R 45 vi 9 (gramm.).

For a suggested etymology, see barīhu. It is unlikely that the phrase ahija ma-’u-ta ú-bar-ra-ha-an-ni EA 20:74 (let. of Tušratta) contains the rare verb barāhu, which occurs only in the list of cryptic terms cited in lex. section. The EA ref. should probably be emended, possibly to ušašrahanni, ušarrashanni, or be read umašrahanni as a mistake for ušašrahanni.

von Soden, Or. NS 27 254f.

barakku s.; outbuilding, corridor, passage; OB, SB, NB; Sum. lw.; pl. barakkū and barakkāni; wr. syll. and (in OB) É.BAR.RA.

é.bár.ra = ba-rak-ku (followed by rugbu, asuppu, šahūru) Igituh I 366.

a) in private houses: giš.ig é.bár.ra door of the outbuilding Jean Tell Sifr 5:11 (OB); É pa-ni ša bit šūti u ba-rak-ka-šú the front building of the south house and its outbuilding (rented) Nbn. 48:5.

b) in the bit hilāni: ina ba-ra-ak-ki ša qereb É papāḥāni apti birrī upattā in the corridors between the rooms I made openings for windows and arches(?) OIP 2 119:24, also ibid. 106 vi 30, cf. ṣulūl tarāni ša qereb ba-rak-ka-a-ni eṭūssun ušaḥlā (for translat., see ṣulūl mng. 1) ibid. 107 vi 37 and 120:28 (Senn.).

In the lex. passage and in the refs. to a private dwelling, barakku seems to denote an outbuilding, while in the description of the bit hilāni built by Sennacherib, a dark corridor inside the building seems to be meant. See also kisalbarakku (from kisal.bar.ra) “outer courtyard.”

The relationship of barāru to barāri, barīru, etc., is not altogether clear. There is no evidence that barāru, at least when said of the eyes, means “sparkle.” It seems more likely to connect barāritu, the first watch of the evening, with barāru. Barāritu is the time of day when one perceives objects only dimly in the descending darkness; barāru, when used as a symptom of eye disease, may refer to a film or growth such as a cataract, which likewise dulls the vision and the appearance of the eye. Ú-šab-ra(-)ár bu-x (or ušabra ubbu-x) (in broken context) ZA 4 255 iii 3 (coll. W. G. Lambert) remains obscure.

In JCS 4 73:5 read ma-ra-rum (= A VIII/3 Comm. 5).

A derivation from barāhu is unlikely, for it could not appropriately be applied to Nabû and would also require a form bāriḥ instead of barhu. The context suggests a meaning similar to that of aśaridu. Since the refs. are all late, a WSem. word may be suggested such as Talmudic Aram. barħā (Syr. barrāħā) Brockelmann Lex. Syr.² 106) meaning “bell-

The adverbial use of ibašši (cross-referenced in CAD 7 s.v.) has been cited separately sub mng. 2. For the use of ibašši with the suffixes of the stative in EA, see mng. 1h.

Two semantic spheres can be traced in bašū. On the one hand is the meaning "to store, to keep," which is restricted to the OA texts, where it is attested in I and IV (IV/2), although the lexical texts mention bašū side by side with nasāru (both corresponding to Sum. gál). On the other hand we have the meaning "to be in existence," attested in I, in the factitive III, and in the inchoative IV.

The present tense forms of bašū and nabšū (ibašši and ibbašši) cannot always be clearly separated, since it is possible that the writing ibašši is a defective writing of ibbašši, as several variants indicate, or that the two forms are synonymous.

4. roughhewn: ^aALAD ^aLAMMA bat-qu-te (see aladlammū discussion section) Iraq 17 134 No. 16:13 (NA).

In mng. 3d, the late substantive batqu should be considered an Aram. loan word (from late Hebrew and Aram. bedeq) and read badqu. This seems preferable to assuming a special development in Akkadian (NA and NB only). It is even likely (if Craig ABRT 1 18, in lex. section is to be taken literally, not as an idiom) that batqa . . . kašaru and batqa . . . šabātu belong to badqu* rather than to batqu. The chance similarity has favored a confusion here.

In three NB marriage contracts (VAS 6 61:3, 95:5, Strassmaier Liverpool 8:9) batultu seems to be replaced by SAL.NAR (with phonetic complements -ti and -tu₄) and by LÚ.NAR (PN mārassu LÚ.NAR Strassmaier Liverpool 8:9). Delitzsch (HWB 191a) and Landsberger (ZA 39 290f.) see in NAR a late writing for batultu. The word denotes primarily an age group; only in specific contexts such as the cited section of the Assyrian Code and in NB marriage contracts does it assume the connotation "virgin." No personal name batultu is attested; Nbk. 369:4 and 9, cited Tallqvist NBN 23, s.v., is to be read 'Ba-tu-ú.

The relation between the refs. sub usage a and b remains uncertain. The latter could be interpreted as an Aram. loan word from baṭṭā (Brockelmann Lex. Syr.² p. 66a) denoting a pitcher or jar. This seems in harmony with the observation that most of the cited Neo-Babylonian household inventories list one baṭū beside several kāsu-goblets, thus forming sets.

While in the OB refs. the meaning “to press a person for money or services” applies in all known instances without illegal implications, such a nuance seems to be present in the OA and one Mari ref. (ARM 5 39:13). The EA passage is too conjectural to permit interpretation.

In OA the term refers to capital placed by money lenders (tamkāru) at the disposal of traveling merchants in a long-term credit transaction in which interest is never mentioned. In certain instances the borrower had to offer the services and person of a relative or a slave either because security was required or because the be'ulātu was granted only to persons such as merchants or persons performing menial and other services (kašsāru, sāridu) who were directly attached to the enterprise.

The numerous writings with doubled n and the otherwise unattested use of a cohortative i before an imperative speak against the assumption of a verb bánu* attested solely in the imperative bīn*. It is here assumed that the particles bī and ibī are fused in an idiomatic locution with the imperative of nadānu as suggested by C. H. Gordon in Or. NS 22 230. The particle bī would then have to be connected with Heb. bī in spite of the latter's restricted use.

The entry ka.inim.m[a.a]k.a = i-bi-in make a “word”! (followed by [x.m]u.dè [x].TUK.TUK.un) Nabnitu E 49, represents the imperative of a verb abānu, attested in lex. only, and is not connected with the NB forms i-bi-in-nam, etc. The same verb, abānu, is to be restored in x níg.n.u.ub.dù.dù, IMⁿⁱ-gi^{ri}GIR₆, KAL.KAL = a-[ba-nu], KU^{tu}.IMⁿⁱ.dul.dul = ub-bu-[nu] Nabnitu XXII 157-160.

The word bibbulu is rarely written syllabically in astrological texts (e.g., ZA 52 252:105f.) and is so written mostly when referring to the god associated with a planet (Ninurta). When it refers to Mercury, the reading of the logogram (UDU.IDIM).GU₄.UD seems to be, at least in late texts, šiblū, see Sachs, LBAT p. xxxvii to No. 1611, and the logogram (UDU.IDIM).SAG.UŠ when referring to Saturn is to be read kajamānu. Otherwise, the logogram MUL. UDU.IDIM.(MEŠ) in astrological texts refers most likely to a planet; it is possible that some of the references are to comets. The word is not attested in astronomical texts.

In CT 12 25 ii 39 and dupls. (A I/2:182, coll.) read eg-rum, see egru.

In the cited references the word in the form biblāni seems to refer to hemerologies or texts of the iqqur īpuš type. Etymologically, however, biblu seems to denote rather a type of tablet ("handbook," "manualis") than a type of text. Possibly the use of "pocket hemerologies" for ready reference caused this shift in meaning.

Since the medical texts and rituals use billatu as a solid or dry ingredient (to be crushed, moistened, and eaten) and never as a carrier for medication as šikaru (KAŠ, KAS. SAG) is used, it is evident that billatu is one of the dry mixtures which enter into the brewing process. This is also confirmed by the OB refs. cited and by the fact that it is measured by dry measures (homer, gur, and sila), and by pieces or lumps. It may designate the dry mixture of malted and roasted grain ready for infusion and fermentation, and possibly also the first, still unfermented, infusion itself, i.e., the sweetwort, see Civil, Studies Oppenheim p. 76f. The dry state of dida in Sum. texts is also seen from such passages as, e.g. a.nu kaš.nu du₈.nu KAŠ.Ú.SA.nu zì.nu ^zmilla.nu túg.nu ^{tāg}níg.dará.nu there is no water, (and much less) beer, there are no baked goods, (and much less) dida, there is no flour, (and much less) milla-flour, there are no clothes, (and much less) a loincloth Dialogue 1:40 (courtesy M. Civil).

The meaning of the element Ú.SA in the compound logogram KAŠ.Ú.SA (also KAŠ.Ú.SA, KAŠ.U.SA) is unknown; the reading dida given in Diri is certainly not applicable for all its occurrences. The etymology of Akkadian billatu, however, indicates that it is a "mixture" of some sort. Another meaning, "mixing vat," is seen in the Mari reference cited, and by the parallelism with namzītu in the OB incantation.

The qualifier našpi presents difficulties, since it occurs both as našpi, probably as a genitive, and as našiptu, as a fem. adjective. Possibly the qualifier SIG₅ or SIG is to be read našiptu; however, some of the occurrences of KAŠ.Ú.SA SIG/SIG₅ may have to be read billu našpu, see billu A, or šikar našpi, see KAŠ.Ú.SA SI.GA KÙ.GA : KAŠ.MEŠ na-áš-pi el-le-[te] STT 197:42f.

In the NB period, KAŠ alone is rare and is normally accompanied by a qualifier; usually KAŠ.SAG and billatu are mentioned. Hence it seems that billatu refers in this period to beer as a generic term.

The evidence suggests a native and ubiquitous small tree or shrub whose wood can be utilized only for small objects; it seems to have had distinctive seeds and was considered especially efficacious for purification rites (possibly because of the refreshing smell of some part of the tree). Two homonyms binūtu must be assumed to be derivatives of both banū A and banū B. They have been treated together here because variants show that the separation was not strictly maintained, e.g., the variant binūtu for binīt qātī (to banū A) and the variant binūtu for binūt nūnī (to banū B). The expressions binūt tāmti, apsi, etc., and those which refer to stature, form, and the like should be considered as belonging to banū B, while the refs. that refer to creations by a god or by the hands (of a god), belong to banū A.

For discussion of the problems involved see Landsberger, MSL 8/1 67ff., especially, for mng. 1, p. 67 top, for mng. 2, p. 70f. Whether GUD. NINDÁ in texts from Sippar is actually to be read taptíru (see MSL 8/1 70f.) or only refers to young bull calves which have been castrated remains uncertain. At any rate, this interpretation should only be applied where GUD. NINDÁ is in opposition to šuklulu, “perfect,” as in Nbk. 114:2, Nbn. 699:4, BRM 1 91:22f., Dar. 1:1, VAS 6 11:3 and 21, 21:3, 29:8 and 32:8, Moldenke 2 49:10.

The NbK. refs. under usage c have been cited here on the strength of the unique variant bišimtu (CT 37 7 i 26), and the usage, in the same texts, of bi-ši-ti libitti, which compares with bišimti igāri Nabnitu E 117, in lex. section. It seems likely, however, that bišitu is to be taken as a derivative of bašū, in the meaning “possession, wealth,” or the like (see bišitu), and that its variant bišimtu represents an archaized spelling or a wrongly reconstructed form.

The general meaning of this poetic adjective in Akkadian is suggested by the Sumerian correspondences of the vocabularies (en, lugal, nam.en.na) and of the cited bilingual text (peš, see Sjöberg Mondgott 157f.) and should not be too narrowly defined (Goetze, JAOS 65 229, Oppenheim, JNES 4 161 n. 74). The few Ur III references to sheep and goats qualified as nam.en.na (YOS 4 237:217, TCL 5 pl. 25 6038 v end, and Oberhuber Florenz 36:9, see also Schneider, Or. 22 26 s and 29 m) do not yield sufficient information as to the meaning of the Sumerian term and shed no light on Akkadian bitrū.

For the two words for “shoulder” and “forehead” the ambiguity of the writing does not permit deciding between the pair pādu and būtu or the pair būdu and pātu. Here the latter readings have been accepted. The reading murgu of the sign MUR₇ (originally different from SIG₄ and LUM) seems to combine mur (= būdu) and gú “neck.” The sign SIG₄ in VAS 9 174:20 should be read eṣenṣēru.

The refs. YOS 10 56 iii 6, CT 22 105:10, also ina pāt tāritim before the nurse JCS 9 8 A 12, B 13, ibid. 11 C 11 and, wr. SAG.KI, ibid. D 9, also YOS 11 12:6 cited Goetze, JCS 9 14 n. 38 are cited sub pātu. In the OAk. inc. the line in pu-ti-su (parallel: in qātišu) cited MAD 3 211, also most likely is to be taken as pātu. In CT 28 34 K.8274:21f. the sign has to be read SIG₄, see lībittu.

The writing ZAG.MEŠ in the SB Izbu reference cited imittu C in the discussion section seems to stand after all for imittu, and the proposal of a reading būdu should be dismissed.

The semantic relation between bukānu, “pestle,” and išid bukāni, a “tick” or “bedbug,” is not clear, see Landsberger, MSL 2 113ff. The name of the insect also appears abbreviated as bukānu, and in the pharmaceutical lists is written with the determinative 𒌆, the general determinative for materia medica.

In ABL 1393:3 read ki-i -bu-kan-ni, see abāku A; in CT 41 30:6, read išdu [ša šin]-ni, see MSL 2 113.

The word bukru, like its feminine counterpart, bukurtu, is used chiefly in poetic contexts; it rarely refers to human beings. Although the root bkr in other Semitic languages frequently means "first-born," "early," etc., there is no indication that such was the nuance in Akkadian. In fact, the use of the noun in the plural (referring to children of the same father), and its further specification as rēštū when the heir is meant indicate that the word meant "son" without the connotation of "eldest."

While būlu in mng. 1 clearly denotes a herd (of domesticated animals) rather than cattle as a collective designation, the usage in mng. 2 has to be established by context whenever the word occurs alone (i.e., without the specification šeri or the apposition nammaššū). Administrative texts use būlu rarely in OB (Sippar and Mari), but more often in NB.

Bunnu (or bunnū) refers to a share in land in co-ownership in a situation comparable to that denoted by pūt zitti, see zittu mng. 2e-2', and is applied to the land when its area is given instead of the proportional share of the individual. If the correct form is bunnu, the word may be identical with bunnu, bānu "face" by a metaphor comparable to the use of zīmu in ana zīmi, see zīmu mng. 3.

The identification of burāšu as juniper is based on etymology (see Löw Flora 3 33ff.) and supported by the fact that the berry-like fruit of the juniper is called kirkirānu while the cones of the other conifers are called terinnatu. The designation burāšu for the conifers used in Urartu for roof beams may represent a transfer from the real juniper whose wood is not usable for such purposes. Since the juniper is ubiquitous in the hills to the west and north of Mesopotamia, the frequent references to "mountain of burāšu-trees" could indicate that several conifers were designated by this term. The problems concerning the etymology of burtu (purtu seems preferable) and the meanings "fully grown cow" and "heifer calf" have been discussed in MSL 8/1 pp. 63-66. The possibility that ÁB.GAL is to be read burtu and not lititu in MB (BE 14 11:7, 52:4, 137:2, 162:2, BE 15 199:1), in SB (Köcher BAM 248 iii 54, Thompson Gilg. pl. 59 K.3200:8), in early NB (YOS 1 37 ii 5 and 14, BRM 1 3:2), and later NB (TCL 12 90:23, TCL 13 135:3, 139:11, AnOr 8 38:1, 4, 9, 15, RA 11 184:11, and passim in texts from Uruk such as in YOS 6, YOS 7, UCP 9/1) has to be kept in mind. The word burtu seems to denote simply the female of the species regardless of age.

Akk. burū and Sum. muru are related, either as loan words or through derivation from a substrate word. Sumerian muru is attested in Hh. VIII, see lex. section, also in ^dAMA-a-ma-mu-ru GI.KID.MAH = ^dNinkarrak CT 25 3:59, dupl. ibid. 29 Rm. II 289 ii 7 (An = Anum V 150). būru E (or pūru) s.; (a synonym for sky); syn. list*; Sum. lw.

bu-ru = šá-mu-ú CT 25 18 r. ii 20 (catchline).

Loan word from Sum. buru, the reading given to the sign U in the equivalence šamū in A II/4:109 and 129f. The cited catchline is the incipit of a synonym list, for which see A. D. Kilmer, JAOS 83 423b.

burubalū A s.; unimproved land(?); OB, Mari, Elam; Sum. lw.; wr. syll. and (É) BUR.BALA, KI.BUR.BALA (KI.BAD VAS 8 1:1).

a) in gen.: bit PN ahišu na-di-i [bu]-ru-ba-lu-ú the house of his brother (or: colleague) is abandoned, it is unimproved VAS 16 112:13 (let.); 2 SAR É.DÙ.A $\frac{1}{2}$ SAR bu-ru-ba-lu-um ŠU.NIGÍN $2\frac{1}{2}$ SAR É two sar improved house-plot, $\frac{1}{2}$ sar unimproved plot, together two and a half sar of plot CT 8 23a:1 (Sippar leg.).

b) with É: $\frac{2}{3}$ SAR 2 GÍN É.BUR.BALA 1 SAR BUR.BALA Gautier Dilbat 25:1 and 7 (exchange transaction), cf. (in sale contracts) ibid. 11:1, 12:1, 16:1, 20:1, 29:1, 31:1, also $\frac{1}{2}$ SAR É.BUR.BALA TCL 1 57:1 (Dilbat), $1\frac{2}{3}$ SAR É.BUR.BALA CT 6 7b:1, [x] SAR É bu-ru-ba-lu-um CT 8 31c:1, 1 SAR É.DÙ.A 1 SAR É bu-ru-ba-lu-um CT 45 23:2, wr. É bu-ru-ba-lu-ú-um ibid. 7 (all Sippar); $1\frac{1}{2}$ SAR É ... É bu-ru-ba-lu-um ARM 8 4:8.

c) with KI: KI.BUR.BALA VAS 8 6:1 (tablet) and 7:1 (case), also 12 SAR KI.BUR.BALA ibid. 2:1 (case), but note KI.BAD ibid. 1:1 (tablet) (both from Sippar).

d) with A.ŠÀ: 2 SAR A.ŠÀ bu-ru-ba-lu-ú ARM 8 5:1, also $4\frac{2}{3}$ SAR A.ŠÀ bu-ru-ba-lu-ú (exchanged for 7 SAR É.DÙ.A) ibid. 8:2; A.ŠÀ bu-ru-[ba-lu-um] (uncert.) MDP 23 217:1.

The small size of the plots called burubalū (two sar or less, with the exception of a $4\frac{2}{3}$ sar field in Mari and a 12 sar plot VAS 8 1) suggests that the term burubalū represents a regional variant (Dilbat, Sippar, Mari) for either kislah or ki.gál. One should probably compare burubalū with the term turbalū listed as Akk. equivalent of KI.UD (with the reading kislah) and of KI.KAL (with the reading kankal) in Hh. I 167 and 171, and in Erimhuš V 85, and Diri IV 251 and 255 (see MSL 5 p. 21), and as Akk. equivalent of LAGAR×ŠE (with reading su-ú) in Diri IV 247. The term KI.BAD, which replaces KI.BUR.BALA in VAS 8 1:1, may be connected with KI.KAL which has the reading bad in the meanings apitu, dannatu, and terētu in Diri IV 263ff. The Sum. etymology of bur.bala remains obscure, since the word is always written with the sign bur, which denotes stone, and never with the sign bùr (U), which denotes a hole, and since bala does not mean “to dig.” It seems to refer to wasteland and unimproved land or to denote small plots of land situated at the edge of or in between larger parcels.

The reference in the OB conjuration JCS 9 10:27, the context of the group voc. 2R 44 No. 2:13ff., and the enumerations of the b.-disease with bi’āru and girgiššu (see girgiššu in ša girgišši) suggest strongly that the designation būšānu refers to a type or stage of leprosy. The stark description of the symptoms in Köcher BAM 29 and parallels, the references to the secretion from the ravaged nostrils (Labat TDP 228:97f. and AMT 36,2:1), the tell-tale name of the disease, from “to smell bad,” and the repeated mention of mouth and nose of the patient support the proposed identification. Note also that KA in buṭuttu C (buṭumtu) s.; (a cereal preparation used in making bread); Mari, MB, SB; wr. syll. with determinatives zíd and šé.

a) in Mari: 2½ GUR 20 (SÌLA) isqūqum 1½ GUR 30 (SÌLA) tīqtum 20 (SÌLA) sasqū 10 (SÌLA) bu-tu-um-tum naphar 4½ GUR 20 (SÌLA) bu-rum 320 silas of isqūqu-flour, 210 silas of tīqtu-flour, twenty silas of sasqū-flour, ten silas of b.-flour, in all 560 silas of burru ARM 9 98 v 30; 14 SÌLA b]u-du-um-tum (listed among types of bread) ARMT 11 109:7, cf. 2 SÌLA bu-ud-du-tum (listed among NINDA burum) ibid. 70:10, 2 SÌLA bu-du-um-tum ibid. 44:5, 2 SÌLA bu-tu-tum ibid. 47:4', 2 SÌLA bu-tu-um-tum ibid. 293:4, 1 SÌLA bu-tu-um-tum ARM 12 76:4, also [x SÌLA] bu-du-u[m-tum] ibid. 468:4.

c) in SB: zíd bu-ṭu-tú ina mé tar(!)-bak qaqqassu tašammid you mix b.-flour in water and apply the poultice to his head AMT 6,1:8; zíd bu-ṭu-tú (in broken context) AMT 34,1:26; [x] kuppinēti šé bu-ṭu-ut-ti ebbeti x pellets of pure b. (in a ritual) STT 69:27.

The three entries buṭuttu A, B, and C cannot easily be differentiated. The pertinent lex. refs. sub buṭuttu A and B would clearly establish the meanings of the two words were it not for the references (cited buṭuttu A mng. 3b) which show the word in contexts which may belong with the Mari and med. refs. cited buṭuttu C usages a and c. Even ARMT 11 13:2 cited buṭuttu A mng. 3a could conceivably be taken as referring to the cereal. When buṭuttu refers to a foodstuff, it cannot be clearly established whether pistachio nuts or some kind of coarse flour or groats are meant. As to buṭuttu B and C, the fact that sub B are solely references to a cereal—most likely a type of emmer—mentioned in large quantities in texts from Nippur (Persian period), separates this word from buṭuttu C which denotes a cereal product and appears, in small quantities, only in Mari, in MB Nippur, and, rarely, in pharmaceutical contexts in SB.
